Distinguished Speaker Series

LA City Arts:

Notes on Cultural Planning in the City of Los Angeles

Adolfo V. Nodal, M.A.

President, Cultural Affairs Commission, City of Los Angeles

Adolfo V. Nodal currently works as Project General Manager for the Annenberg Foundation and oversees the Not A Cornfield project and the construction of other public art projects downtown. He also contributes to the cultural development and political evolution of his native Cuba, serving as president of the Cuba Culture Foundation and organizing cultural, humanitarian and religious missions to his native country. Nodal served as General Manager of the City of Los Angeles' Cultural Affairs Department from 1988 to 2001, where he helped establish the city's Endowment for the Arts and developed comprehensive arts and cultural heritage master plans. Prior to his position in city government, Nodal worked as executive director of several contemporary arts institutions across the country including the Washington Project for the Arts in Washington, DC, the Otis Parsons School of Art Exhibition Center in Los Angeles and the Contemporary Arts Center in New Orleans. Nodal received a bachelor's degree in Art from Florida State University in Tallahassee in 1972 and earned a master's degree in Contemporary Art from California State University at San Francisco.
