Building a Culture of Peace

For the Children of the World

This exhibit brings together the ideas of hundreds of people and organizations dedicated to finding a path to lasting peace.

We hope that you will leave with renewed confidence that a culture of peace is possible—and a necessity for life on earth.

Everything that is needed to build a culture of peace already exists in each of our hearts. As stated in the United Nations definition, a Culture of Peace is a set of values, attitudes, modes of behavior and ways of life that reject violence and prevent conflicts by tackling their root causes and solving problems through dialogue and negotiation among individuals, groups and nations.
Barriers to Peace

Environmental Irresponsibility
Pollution and the destruction of the natural environment require solutions that go beyond national boundaries.

Global warming could cause 40 to 50 percent of the world’s population to be affected by insect-transmitted diseases such as malaria and dengue fever.

Poverty
Need is the root cause of most of the conflict in the world. Where children are hungry, there can be no peace.

76% of Sub-Saharan Africans and 84% of South Asians live on less than $2 a day. If the world’s 6.4 billion people fought, it is estimated that nearly 75% are women.

Isolationism
People can become frightened by the rising tide of internationalism. Some retreat to familiar places and customs and avoid encounters with “foreigners.”

Ignorance of other cultures and countries creates a narrow, distorted view of life and the world. Education is key to fostering global-minded individuals.

Poverty
Need is the root cause of most of the conflict in the world. Where children are hungry, there can be no peace.

76% of Sub-Saharan Africans and 84% of South Asians live on less than $2 a day. If the world’s 6.4 billion people fought, it is estimated that nearly 75% are women.

Isolationism
People can become frightened by the rising tide of internationalism. Some retreat to familiar places and customs and avoid encounters with “foreigners.”

Ignorance of other cultures and countries creates a narrow, distorted view of life and the world. Education is key to fostering global-minded individuals.

Greed
A struggle between powers for territorial dominance led to two World Wars and the Cold War. The struggle now is for economic domination.

Europe consumes roughly 20 times the resources of sub-Saharan Africa. The United States, with just over 4% of the world’s people, consumes 28% of its natural resources. Japan, with about 2% of the world’s population, is the world’s largest energy consumer. More than 80% of Japan’s energy is imported.

Prejudice and Stereotyping
To motivate people to make war, the enemy must be a recognizable evil—a stereotype. Prejudice and hate are fueled by ignorance.

“All war is based on deception.” —The Art of War, by Sun Tzu, circa 500 BCE

Nuclear Threat
Nuclear weapons are the ultimate embodiment of human negativity. A balance of nuclear power is impossible.

There are enough nuclear weapons stockpiled to devastate the Earth and kill every person on the planet several times over.

The Illusion of “Efficiency”
In the technocratic view that places the utmost value on technological progress, efficiency and expediency, humans become reduced to things.

This dehumanizing tendency is widely evident in the language of war planning, where the death of innocent people becomes “collateral damage,” asstach becomes “strobe,” and “liquidation” and “neutralize” become euphemisms for killing.

“It is not the violence of a few that scares me, it is the silence of the many.” —Martin Luther King, Jr.
The United Nations and the Culture of Peace

As defined by the United Nations, the Culture of Peace is a set of values, attitudes, modes of behavior and ways of life that reject violence and prevent conflicts by tackling their root causes to solve problems through dialogue and negotiation among individuals, groups and nations.

1989
A “culture of peace” was first expressed officially at the International Congress on Peace in the Minds of People held in Ivory Coast, Africa.

1997
UN designated the year 2000 the “International Year for the Culture of Peace.”

1999
On September 13, the UN General Assembly adopted the “Declaration on a Culture of Peace” and the “Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace.”

2000
“International Year for a Culture of Peace” UNESCO supported the Manifesto 2000 signature-collecting campaign.

2001
Start of the “International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World.”
The Pattern of Peace

The Culture of Peace is made up of an infinite number of interlocking pieces. Each of us has a part to play in the pattern of peace.

“A peace culture ... can be defined as a mosaic of identities, attitudes, values, beliefs, and patterns that leads people to live nurturingly with one another and the earth itself without the aid of structured power differentials, to deal creatively with their differences, and to share their resources. Violence is more visible and gets more attention in our history books and in our media than peace does. But peace culture will take us where we want to go.”

—Elise Boulding, Women’s Views on the Earth Charter
Toward a Global Culture of Peace

Change begins with individuals who work to make their dreams come true. We begin by believing that a Culture of Violence can change to a Culture of Peace.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Culture of Violence/War</th>
<th>Culture of Peace</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Violence</td>
<td>Nonviolence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hierarchical, vertical authority</td>
<td>Democratic, participative</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rules, orders</td>
<td>Dialogue, communication</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exploitative of people and the natural environment</td>
<td>Respect for human rights and dignity. Sustainable development.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Male-dominated</td>
<td>Power sharing between men and women. Empowerment of women.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secretive (information is controlled)</td>
<td>Open sharing of information</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Demonizing “other” or enemy</td>
<td>Tolerance and respect for diversity</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Division</td>
<td>Unity and cooperation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Responding to conflict with violent suppression</td>
<td>Negotiation, mediation. Search for nonviolent solutions to causes of conflict.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The United Nations’ 8 Action Areas for Peace

The General Assembly of the United Nations has designated 2001-2010 as the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World.

What is a Culture of Peace?
A Culture of Peace consists of values, attitudes and behaviors that reject violence. In a peaceful world, we solve problems through dialogue and negotiation.

What can we do to create a Culture of Peace?
In 1999, the United Nations defined eight action areas that you see pictured here. As you visit this exhibition, think about actions that you can take in your school, home or community.

Fostering a culture of peace through education by promoting education for all, focusing especially on girls; revising curricula to promote the qualitative values, attitudes and behavior inherent in a culture of peace; training for conflict prevention and resolution, dialogue, consensus-building and active non-violence...

Promoting sustainable economic and social development by targeting the eradication of poverty; focusing on the special needs of children and women; working towards environmental sustainability; fostering national and international co-operation to reduce economic and social inequalities...

What steps can you start taking today to help safeguard the future of our planet? Do you know what the Earth Charter is? Can you find out?

Is there a conflict prevention and resolution training program at your school? Can you start or join one?
Promoting respect for all human rights
by distributing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at all levels and fully implementing international instruments on human rights...

Do you think violence in movies and television affects children? Is there anything you can do about violence in the media?

Ensuring equality between women and men by integrating a gender perspective and promoting equality in economic, social and political decision-making; eliminating all forms of discrimination and violence against women; supporting and aiding women in crisis situations resulting from war and all other forms of violence...

What are some examples in your community of ways that women are not equal to men? Do you believe that women have a special role in creating a culture of peace? Why?

Fostering democratic participation by educating responsible citizens; reinforcing actions to promote democratic principles and practices; establishing and strengthening national institutions and processes that promote and sustain democracy...

Do schools in your area teach democratic citizenship? What can you do to help children learn responsibility?
Advancing understanding, tolerance and solidarity by promoting a dialogue among civilizations; actions in favor of vulnerable groups; respect for difference and cultural diversity...

Do you have friends from other countries or cultures? What are you doing to fight prejudice and stereotyping?

Supporting participatory communication and the free flow of information and knowledge by means of such actions as support for independent media in the promotion of a culture of peace; effective use of media and mass communications; measures to address the issue of violence in the media; knowledge and information sharing through new technologies...

Do you know how to access the Internet on a computer? What could you do to help people in poorer countries get the equipment and the knowledge that you have?

Promoting international peace and security through action such as the promotion of general and complete disarmament; greater involvement of women in prevention and resolution of conflicts and in promoting a culture of peace in post-conflict situations; initiatives in conflict situations; encouraging confidence-building measures and efforts for negotiating peaceful settlements...

What are you doing to promote peace? UNESCO has educational resources for many of these action areas. Visit www.unesco.org
“It isn’t enough to talk about peace. One must believe in it. And it isn’t enough to believe in it. One must work at it.”

Eleanor Roosevelt

“The life of active nonviolence is the fruit of an inner peace and spiritual unity…”

Mairead Maguire

“These are all our children. We will all profit by, or pay for, whatever they become.”

James Baldwin

“If we have no peace, it is because we have forgotten that we belong to each other.”

Mother Teresa

“Heroism has nothing to do with skin color or social status. It is a state of mind and a willingness to act for what is right and just.”

Maya Angelou

“To move forward we must recognize that in the midst of a magnificent diversity of cultures and life forms we are one human family and one earth community with a common destiny…”

From the Preamble of the Earth Charter

“Imagine all the people living life in peace. You may say I’m a dreamer, but I’m not the only one. I hope someday you’ll join us, and the world will be as one.”

John Lennon

“I prayed for twenty years but received no answer until I prayed with my legs.”

Frederick Douglass

“Establishing lasting peace is the work of education; all politics can do is keep us out of war.”

Maria Montessori
Paths to Peace

“Today’s real borders are not between nations, but between powerful and powerless, free and fettered, privileged and humiliated.

Today, no walls can separate humanitarian or human rights crises in one part of the world from national security crises in another…”

In this new century, we must start from the understanding that peace belongs not only to states or peoples, but to each and every member of those communities. Peace must be made real and tangible in the daily existence of every individual in need.

Peace must be sought, above all, because it is the condition for every member of the human family to live a life of dignity and security.”

—Kofi Annan
Self Mastery

“Nothing can bring you peace but yourself.”
—Ralph Waldo Emerson

Peace begins with the individual. When we can examine and get rid of the negativity in our own lives, we can solve problems without violence.

“As human beings, our greatness lies not so much in being able to remake the world, as in being able to remake ourselves.”
—Mohandas Gandhi
Dialogue and Tolerance

“I believe that the widespread use of cross-cultural dialogue will foster the global community we so earnestly seek.”
—Michael Nobel

Intolerance and discrimination happen when people see one another as objects, as “other.” As we frankly exchange ideas and get to know one another as people like ourselves we establish true world harmony.

“Teaching our children to treat others as they wish to be treated is one of the most fundamental values we adults can pass on. We would have a different country and world if this lesson was learned and followed.”
—Marian Wright Edelman
“I hear people talking about the community, and I stop and think and I feel that we each use a different language. Community means balance.”

—Rigoberta Menchu Tum

To have peace we must end economic and military competition and acknowledge our planetary interconnections. As citizens of the world we must consider the needs of the entire planet and of all humankind.
Moving from a culture of war to a culture of peace means vast internal transformations in individuals as well as nations. We must move from an era of cultural imperialism, in which powerful nations impose their will on weaker countries, to an era of cultural exchange and respect.

"At a time when people of very different traditions, faiths and ideals have come into sudden and close contact with one another, the survival of humankind requires that people be willing to live with one another and to accept that there is more than one path to truth and salvation."

—Arnold Toynbee

“A single, all-embracing global civilization has arisen.”

—Vaclav Havel
What will the role of nations be in the new millennium? There will always be a place for homelands dedicated to equality, mutual respect and peaceful coexistence. We must also transcend national boundaries to establish principles and universal ideals that are global in scope.

“More than an end to war, we want an end to the beginning of all wars — yes, an end to this brutal, inhuman and thoroughly impractical method of settling the differences between governments.”
—Franklin D. Roosevelt

“The love of one’s country is a splendid thing. But why should love stop at the border?”
—Pablo Casals
Environmental destruction, population growth and poverty are intricately connected. Aid from industrialized nations and internal education and reform are both needed. A new world view in which all things are seen as connected and all human beings are equal is the ultimate solution.

“Our human situation no longer permits us to make armed dichotomies between those who are good and those who are evil, those who are right and those who are wrong. The first blow dealt to the enemy’s children will sign the death warrant of our own.”

—Margaret Mead

“The good we secure for ourselves is precarious and uncertain until it is secured for all of us and incorporated into our common life.”

—Jane Addams
Disarmament

Ultimately, we must end our reliance on weapons, particularly nuclear weapons, as so-called deterrents to war. Ending our trust in arms is the only way to bring trust among peoples. The solidarity and action of common people can bring about total disarmament.

“To suggest that war can prevent war is a base play on words and a despicable form of warmongering. The world has had ample evidence that war begets only conditions that beget further war.”

—Ralph Bunche

“I know not with what weapons World War III will be fought, but World War IV will be fought with sticks and stones.”

—Albert Einstein
“Throughout history, religious differences have divided men and women from their neighbors and have served as justification for some of humankind’s bloodiest conflicts. In the modern world, it has become clear that people of all religions must bridge these differences and work together, to ensure our survival and realize the vision of peace that all faiths share.”

—H.R.H. Prince El-Hassan bin Talal of Jordan
There are dozens of major religions in the world and thousands of belief systems by which people guide their lives, design ethical codes and find comfort from pain. We must learn to use one another’s religious beliefs as ways to connect—not as reasons for conflict.

“When you light the path before another person you brighten your own.”

Buddhism - Nichiren

“Not one of you is a believer until he loves for his brother what he loves for himself.”

Islam - Fourth Hadith of an-Nawawi

“Do not do to others what you do not want them to do to you.”

Confucian – Analects

“A person should treat all creatures as he himself would be treated.”

Jainism - Sutraktanga

“This is the sum of duty: do nothing to others which would cause you pain if done to you.”

Hindu - Mahabharata

“You shall love your neighbor as yourself.”

Jewish - Leviticus
Children are the Future

“Our children and grandchildren – and unborn generations to come – are depending on us...to make the wise decisions that will determine their future. The choice is in our hands.

—James P. Grant

“If we are to teach real peace in this world, and if we are to carry on a real war against war, we shall have to begin with the children.”

—Mohandas Gandhi
Children’s Dreams for Peace

Our children will inherit the earth. The words of the children pictured here remind us that we are all responsible for making sure that children everywhere grow up in peace and security. We work for peace so that children may live free from the terrible effects of war.

“No one has yet realized the wealth of sympathy, the kindness and generosity hidden in the soul of a child.”
—Emma Goldman
The United Nations General Assembly proclaimed the decade 2001-2010 as the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-violence for the Children of the World. UNESCO was designated as lead agency for this Decade.

Manifesto 2000 for a culture of peace and non-violence was drafted by a group of Nobel Peace Prize laureates to translate the resolutions of the United Nations into everyday language and to make them relevant to people everywhere.

Manifesto 2000 does not appeal to a higher authority. It is an individual commitment and responsibility.

Manifesto 2000 is open to signatures from the wider public throughout the world. By September 2003, over 75 million individuals around the world had signed the Manifesto. You are invited to join the Nobel Prize winners, heads of state, and common people everywhere and to become a Messenger of Manifesto 2000.
Do I have negative assumptions about people because of their color, religion or appearance? How do my prejudices influence my perceptions?

Name-calling and teasing is a form of the passive violence that is at the root of physical violence. Do I protect those I see as being weaker than me or do I bully them?

Do I make an effort to include those who are excluded? Do I speak up for those who are being treated badly by others?

What is my attitude to those I see as being different from me? Try to make friends or have a dialogue with someone you wouldn’t usually talk to.

Where do the things I buy, eat and wear come from? Have I ever thought about the different people who helped produce these things? What happens to my garbage? I am part of an interconnected global society.

Are there people in my community or neighborhood who I see but have never spoken to? Take time to get to make friends with the people in your community.

www3.unesco.org/manifesto2000/
THE Power of People

Pierre Marchand

Overcomes Violent Childhood to Work for Peace

“We believe that each child can discover, by themselves, that violence is not inevitable. We can offer hope, not only to the children of the world, but to all of humanity, by beginning to create and build, a new culture of nonviolence.

Pierre Marchand is from Compiegne, near Paris. As a boy he experienced severe violence including rape and torture. His life might well have continued in a destructive direction, but he rose above his pain.

Marchand learned about the nonviolent resistance to evil practiced by Gandhi and King. He became active in Amnesty International and in the French Fellowship of Reconciliation. He founded Partage, an organization to help children affected by war and disaster around the world.

Marchand heard Thich Nhat Hanh talk about teaching nonviolence to children in school and about the importance of each school setting aside a place for meditation and conflict resolution. He heard Marie Pierre Bovy of the Community of the Ark, call for a "Year of Nonviolence."

Combining these ideas, Marchand went to Belfast, Northern Ireland, to talk with Mairead Corrigan-Maguire. She agreed to lead a Nobel Peace Laureates campaign for a Decade of Nonviolence. After writing the text of the appeal in a Children’s Village in India, Pierre began visiting Nobel Peace Laureates to get their signatures. All of them signed on—an unprecedented show of unity. Eventually the United Nations proclaimed 2001-2010 as the Decade of a Culture of Peace and Non-violence, largely because one man stood up for peace.

Zlata Filipovic

War Survivor Works for Peace Through Reconciliation

“I’m always thinking about Sarajevo and about all my family and I’m waiting for everything to be over… We were afraid each day. Imagine how it looks when you’re afraid constantly for three years.”

Zlata Filipovic was a 10-year-old Bosnian schoolgirl when she began keeping her Sarajevo diary in 1991. She wrote about everyday activities—school, piano lessons, skiing, parties, and watching her favorite TV shows. Then the chaos and terror of war shattered her world.

In spite of tragedy and deprivation, Filipovic kept writing in her diary, carefully chronicling the claustrophobia, boredom, resignation, anger, despair, and fear war brings. With vision beyond her years, she wrote that the “political situation is stupidity in motion.”

After the war’s end Filipovic’s diary was published by UNICEF, then in France and the United States. After experiencing war so closely she now uses her spare time to work for peace and helps foster communication between different peoples. She has been part of UNICEF and UNESCO projects and is studying Human Sciences at St John’s College, Oxford, England.

The time has come for the ordinary people, those who have been tossed about on the waves of war and violence in the twentieth century, to take the leading role in history.

The people pictured here have worked for peace in their communities and in the world. All of them have made and are making a real difference in the world. There are millions more like them, working toward a peaceful world.

You too can help to create a culture of peace.
Veneranda Nzambazamariya
Leader of Rwanda's Women's Movement

“Africa

Veneranda Nzambazamariya

In 1994 more than a million people were killed in what the current Rwanda government calls “the fastest and most vicious genocide yet recorded in human history.” Veneranda Nzambazamariya was among a handful of women who, immediately after the genocide, urged Rwandan women to rise above ethnic differences and come together to rebuild the country.

Nzambazamariya, born in 1958, was a founding member of Reseau des Femmes and Pro-Femmes Twese Hamwe (“All Together”), two dynamic women’s organizations in Rwanda. She was active in promoting women’s issues throughout the continent and was a committed member of the Women’s Committee for Peace and Development.

Nzambazamariya dedicated herself to empowering women politically and economically and to restructuring Rwanda’s political, economic and social infrastructures and laws that were biased against women.

“Like Martin Luther King, the women of Rwanda had a dream: that that nightmare will never happen again, in Rwanda and elsewhere.”

Kimmie Weeks
African Youth Flees Homeland to Work for Peace

“Asia

Kimmie Weeks

Kimmie Weeks was born in the West African nation of Liberia. From 1989 until 1997, the people of Liberia lived in a state of civil war, which took the lives of one tenth—ten percent—of the population. The conflict was so ugly that 20,000 children under the age of 18 were turned into soldiers.

Weeks describes his own childhood as one of war, poverty and suffering. At age ten he decided to make a difference. He founded two children’s organizations to fight for the rights of children. He created a news service for youth. And in 1996, he launched the Children’s Disarmament Campaign to get guns out of the hands of child soldiers. That campaign succeeded.

Weeks was honored for his efforts at the Goodwill Games as a UNICEF Young Ambassador. In 1997 he published a report on the training of child soldiers and had to flee Liberia. His life in jeopardy.

Kimmie Weeks has been granted political asylum in the United States. In 2002 he co-founded Youth Action International. The goal of the organization is to propose and implement programs aimed at making the world a better place for children and future generations.

“First look after yourself. Look into your heart and know who you are, and what you have done, and love yourself…”

Nanda Pok
Returns to Cambodia to Empower Women

“We are educating women ahead of the election so they will be aware of important issues that empower women.”

Nanda Pok’s family fled to France and then to the United States in 1975, when she was 14 years old, just before Pol Pot took control of Cambodia. In the 1980s, Pok’s mother began a refugee resettlement program in Houston, Texas. Following her mother’s example, Pok returned to Cambodia in 1992 in order to be part of the reconstruction and development of her homeland.

She is the founder and executive director of Women for Prosperity, an organization that promotes women’s political participation in Cambodia. She has trained more than 5,500 women to run for political office. In February 2002, two-thirds of the nearly 1,000 women elected were trained by her organization.

Pok acted as an official monitor during the general election in 1998 and chaired the Coordinating Committee for the Commune Council Election, which provided voter education to the public and trained and placed observers at every polling station during the 2002 election.

Pok has also taken a courageous stance against the trafficking of women and girls in Asia, and is working to ensure that her own government and the international community take action.

“First look after yourself. Look into your heart and know who you are, and what you have done, and love yourself…”

Mashuda Khatun Shefali
Helping Women Develop Their Own Economic Base

“Asia

Mashuda Khatun Shefali

Mashuda Khatun Shefali overcame terrible obstacles to return to school and become a professional. She is now demonstrating how half a million young women garment workers can obtain safe housing while improving their self awareness and skills. She is helping these Bangladeshi women develop their own economic base and emerge as truly independent actors.

Shefali grew up in rural Bangladesh, but she escaped the restrictions its social traditions place on women for two reasons: she has a fighting spirit, and her parents supported her. When she neared the transition from childhood and was to be withdrawn from school, she resisted. When she was to be married, she resisted again. Two years later she left for Dhaka where she resumed her education, ultimately receiving a master’s in pharmacy from Jahangir Nager University.

In 1981, she got involved at the national level in the rural women’s development movement through the Bangladesh Women’s Rehabilitation and Welfare Foundation. Over the ensuing decade she worked with several development organizations, but kept her special personal focus on giving rural women an alternative when denied education and any life opportunities. She is pioneering a solution to their plight by creating the first low-cost, safe, decent hostels for working women in Dhaka City. Beyond housing, Shefali addresses the women’s socio-economic problems with linked services that empower them to maintain their hard-earned financial independence and freedom.

Asia

Mashuda Khatun Shefali
Helping Women Develop Their Own Economic Base

“Africa

Kimmie Weeks
African Youth Flees Homeland to Work for Peace

“We are educating women ahead of the election so they will be aware of important issues that empower women.”

Nanda Pok’s family fled to France and then to the United States in 1975, when she was 14 years old, just before Pol Pot took control of Cambodia. In the 1980s, Pok’s mother began a refugee resettlement program in Houston, Texas. Following her mother’s example, Pok returned to Cambodia in 1992 in order to be part of the reconstruction and development of her homeland.

She is the founder and executive director of Women for Prosperity, an organization that promotes women’s political participation in Cambodia. She has trained more than 5,500 women to run for political office. In February 2002, two-thirds of the nearly 1,000 women elected were trained by her organization.

Pok acted as an official monitor during the general election in 1998 and chaired the Coordinating Committee for the Commune Council Election, which provided voter education to the public and trained and placed observers at every polling station during the 2002 election.

Pok has also taken a courageous stance against the trafficking of women and girls in Asia, and is working to ensure that her own government and the international community take action.

“First look after yourself. Look into your heart and know who you are, and what you have done, and love yourself…”

Mashuda Khatun Shefali
Helping Women Develop Their Own Economic Base

Mashuda Khatun Shefali overcame terrible obstacles to return to school and become a professional. She is now demonstrating how half a million young women garment workers can obtain safe housing while improving their self awareness and skills. She is helping these Bangladeshi women develop their own economic base and emerge as truly independent actors.

Shefali grew up in rural Bangladesh, but she escaped the restrictions its social traditions place on women for two reasons: she has a fighting spirit, and her parents supported her. When she neared the transition from childhood and was to be withdrawn from school, she resisted. When she was to be married, she resisted again. Two years later she left for Dhaka where she resumed her education, ultimately receiving a master’s in pharmacy from Jahangir Nager University.

In 1981, she got involved at the national level in the rural women’s development movement through the Bangladesh Women’s Rehabilitation and Welfare Foundation. Over the ensuing decade she worked with several development organizations, but kept her special personal focus on giving rural women an alternative when denied education and any life opportunities. She is pioneering a solution to their plight by creating the first low-cost, safe, decent hostels for working women in Dhaka City. Beyond housing, Shefali addresses the women’s socio-economic problems with linked services that empower them to maintain their hard-earned financial independence and freedom.
“People can be taught to kill. And children growing up under the conditions of war that we find in many poor communities today learn to think about death and killing as a matter of survival.”

Child and anti-violence advocate Geoffrey Canada grew up on welfare, in a household headed by a single woman in the tenements of New York’s South Bronx. Despite the many things he did not have, he realized what he did have: a hard-working and loving mother who gave him a strong set of values; a sense of responsibility, a belief in the importance of education, and a deep desire to make things better not only for himself, but for those around him.

After graduate school, Canada returned to the community to live and work in Harlem. In 1996, Canada joined the staff of the Rheedlen Centers for Children and Families. He was named its President and CEO in 1990.

At Rheedlen, he has been instrumental in creating or developing such programs as Rheedlen’s Beacon School, Community Pride, the Harlem Freedom Schools, and Peacekeepers. He is a coordinator for the Black Community Crusade for Children, a nationwide effort to make saving black children the number one priority in the black community.

Canada has focused his work on exposing the intersection of drugs and guns as a turning point in the violence in America and championing community-building as a key response to this violence. The Boston Globe called Canada “the brother who never left the ‘hood because he keeps looking into the faces of the children and seeing himself there.”

When she was 14 Evans created a Web site to help young people share their feelings about violence—both in school and elsewhere. This site, www.y2kyouth.org, covers issues that concern young people, from race and religion to overpopulation. Evans educated herself about computer technology, and now teaches others how to use the Web to advocate peace and non-violence. She averages 200 hours volunteering per year. In 1999 she won the Global Youth Peace and Tolerance Award.

“Mayan Woman Works for Harmony and Women’s Rights”

Juanita Batzibal is an indigenous Guatemalan woman who fled her homeland during the Guatemalan civil war in 1992 and became a political refugee. She spent eighteen years in exile in Costa Rica where she helped to create programs for preserving Mayan culture for the International Mayan League.

While in exile, Juanita made several visits to the UN in Geneva, lobbying for the recognition of Indigenous People’s rights, and to bring an end to the war.

Today Batzibal works for human rights organizations in strengthening indigenous women’s identity, in education and in recognizing the injustices of the past in order to build a society that respects difference.

“The situation in Guatemala is not only caused by 36 years of war, but also by the marginalization of indigenous people and their lack of access to resources, that has been going on for centuries. One of the main obstacles to peace is that many Guatemalans still need basic things. And until they can have access to them, they feel hopeless.”

The indigenous peoples of Guatemala, the Mayas, make up over 60 percent of a population of 10 million. Yet Guatemala has one of the world’s most inequitable distributions of land, with three percent of the population owning over 70 percent of the land, and 90 percent of Mayas not even having enough land to grow food for their families.

Juanita Batzibal is an indigenous Guatemalan woman who

Mayan Woman Works for Harmony and Women’s Rights

Gerson Andrés Flórez Pérez

Colombian Youngster Leads Children’s Peace Movement

“Children’s Advocate Works to End Violence”

Gerson Andrés Flórez Pérez was born in 1986 in one of the poorest areas of Bogotá, Colombia. When he was 11 years old he saw a TV news story about a girl who was killed by a landmine. A few weeks later he read about another dead child and was inspired to do what he could to end the armed conflict in his country.

In June 1997 he wrote a peace proposal which he called “Children of Peace,” asking that the voices and needs of children be considered. The proposal eventually attracted considerable media attention, and led to a national referendum. 2,700,000 children all over Colombia voted, expressing their desire to live in harmony.

After selling pins to raise the money for the journey, Pérez and his father traveled to the Hague Appeal for Peace in the Netherlands. He continues to work for the abolition of anti-personal landmines. In 2002, he became the youngest law student at the Universidad Nueva Granada in Bogotá.

Pérez won the 1999 Global Youth Peace and Tolerance Award. He and the Children’s Movement for Peace were also nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1999.

 “…considerable media attention, and led to a national referendum. 2,700,000 children all over Colombia voted, expressing their desire to live in harmony.”

“Teen Uses Internet to Promote Peace and Nonviolence”

Nickole Evans grew up in a low-income area of Kennewick, a town in Southeastern Washington. Kennewick is a place where immigrants and refugees often arrive when relocating to the United States. Since early childhood, Evans has played with children from Nigeria, Ukraine, Mexico, Bosnia, and Kosovo.

On February 1998, Evans and a friend were beaten by a gang of Bosnian kids. In spite of having been hurt, Evans chose peace over retaliation. She reconciled with the families of the people who assaulted her, and doubled her efforts to help Bosnian young people traumatized by war live peacefully in her neighborhood.

“I have always thought that peace is more than absence of war. We can’t speak of peace when our people day by day become poorer and poorer and have less opportunities to manage in life.”

Gerson Andrés Flórez Pérez was born in 1986 in one of the poorest areas of Bogotá, Colombia. When he was 11 years old he saw a TV news story about a girl who was killed by a landmine. A few weeks later he read about another dead child and was inspired to do what he could to end the armed conflict in his country.

In June 1997 he wrote a peace proposal which he called “Children of Peace,” asking that the voices and needs of children be considered. The proposal eventually attracted considerable media attention, and led to a national referendum. 2,700,000 children all over Colombia voted, expressing their desire to live in harmony.

After selling pins to raise the money for the journey, Pérez and his father traveled to the Hague Appeal for Peace in the Netherlands. He continues to work for the abolition of anti-personal landmines. In 2002, he became the youngest law student at the Universidad Nueva Granada in Bogotá.

Pérez won the 1999 Global Youth Peace and Tolerance Award. He and the Children’s Movement for Peace were also nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1999.

“I have always thought that peace is more than absence of war. We can’t speak of peace when our people day by day become poorer and poorer and have less opportunities to manage in life.”

Gerson Andrés Flórez Pérez was born in 1986 in one of the poorest areas of Bogotá, Colombia. When he was 11 years old he saw a TV news story about a girl who was killed by a landmine. A few weeks later he read about another dead child and was inspired to do what he could to end the armed conflict in his country.

In June 1997 he wrote a peace proposal which he called “Children of Peace,” asking that the voices and needs of children be considered. The proposal eventually attracted considerable media attention, and led to a national referendum. 2,700,000 children all over Colombia voted, expressing their desire to live in harmony.

After selling pins to raise the money for the journey, Pérez and his father traveled to the Hague Appeal for Peace in the Netherlands. He continues to work for the abolition of anti-personal landmines. In 2002, he became the youngest law student at the Universidad Nueva Granada in Bogotá.

Pérez won the 1999 Global Youth Peace and Tolerance Award. He and the Children’s Movement for Peace were also nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1999.

“I have always thought that peace is more than absence of war. We can’t speak of peace when our people day by day become poorer and poorer and have less opportunities to manage in life.”

Gerson Andrés Flórez Pérez was born in 1986 in one of the poorest areas of Bogotá, Colombia. When he was 11 years old he saw a TV news story about a girl who was killed by a landmine. A few weeks later he read about another dead child and was inspired to do what he could to end the armed conflict in his country.

In June 1997 he wrote a peace proposal which he called “Children of Peace,” asking that the voices and needs of children be considered. The proposal eventually attracted considerable media attention, and led to a national referendum. 2,700,000 children all over Colombia voted, expressing their desire to live in harmony.

After selling pins to raise the money for the journey, Pérez and his father traveled to the Hague Appeal for Peace in the Netherlands. He continues to work for the abolition of anti-personal landmines. In 2002, he became the youngest law student at the Universidad Nueva Granada in Bogotá.

Pérez won the 1999 Global Youth Peace and Tolerance Award. He and the Children’s Movement for Peace were also nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1999.
What will I do for peace?
“Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed.”

From the Preamble of the UNESCO Constitution

“A great revolution of character in just one single individual will help achieve a change in the destiny of a society and, further, will enable a change in the destiny of the whole of humankind.”

Daisaku Ikeda, President of SGI

This exhibition was produced by the Soka Gakkai International (SGI), a Buddhist association of 82 constituent organizations with more than 12 million members worldwide. As a nongovernmental organization in consultative status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council, the SGI is engaged in activities to promote peace, education and cultural exchange. See: www.sgi.org
“It is not how much we do, but how much love we put in the doing. It is not how much we give, but how much love we put in the giving.”

Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu, who became Mother Teresa, was born in 1929 into a Roman Catholic Albanian family living in Skopje, capital of the Yugoslav republic of Macedonia. When she was seven, her father was murdered. At the age of 18 Bojaxhiu entered a Sisters of Loreto convent in Ireland. The Sisters of Loreto, a teaching order, sent her to Bengal in 1929.

After sixteen years Mother Teresa left teaching to work in the Calcutta slums. In 1950 she started a new order, the Missionaries of Charity. Over the years, the Missionaries of Charity grew to thousands serving the “poorest of the poor” in 450 centers around the world.

Mother Teresa created many homes for the sick and poor from Calcutta to New York to Albania. She was one of the pioneers of establishing homes for AIDS victims. For more than 45 years, Mother Teresa comforted the poor, the dying, and the unwanted around the world.

Mother Teresa gained worldwide acclaim with her tireless efforts. She won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1979. Mother Teresa died in 1997.

“People always say that I didn’t give up my seat because I was tired, but that isn’t true. I was not tired physically... No, the only tired I was, was tired of giving in.”

Rosa Louise McCauley was born in 1913 in Tuskegee, Alabama. She was the granddaughter of former slaves and the daughter of James McCauley, a carpenter, and Leona McCauley, a rural schoolteacher. She grew up in Montgomery, Alabama. In 1955 she was arrested for resisting an order to surrender her bus seat to a white passenger. Her protest galvanized a growing movement to desegregate public transportation and marked a historic turning point in the African American battle for civil rights. Parks was placed in prison because she became the leading symbol of South Africa’s oppressed black majority.

Nelson Mandela was released on February 18, 1990. After his release, he plunged himself wholeheartedly into his life’s work for peace and justice. In 1991, Mandela was elected President of the ANC, while his lifelong friend and colleague, Oliver Tambo, became the organization’s National Chairperson.

Mandela won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1993. He was the first democratically elected President of South Africa from May 1994 through June 1999. In December 1999, Mandela was appointed Chairperson. Mandela won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1993. He was the first democratically elected President of South Africa from May 1994 through June 1999. In December 1999, Mandela was appointed by a group of African nations to mediate the ethnic strife in Burundi; the Arusha accords, a Tutsi-Hutu power-sharing agreement, were finalized in 2001. Now in his 80s, Mandela continues to work for peace.

We will not build a peaceful world by following a negative path. It is not enough to say ‘We must not wage war.’ It is necessary to love peace and sacrifice for it.”

Martin Luther King’s father and grandfather were both pastors of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, Georgia. Born in 1929, King became pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, Alabama in 1954. In 1957 he was elected president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

King took his principles from Christianity and his non-violent methods from Gandhi. He organized massive protests throughout the South, traveled thousands of miles, made hundreds of speeches, wrote five books and countless articles and was a tireless worker for the rights of Black Americans. At thirty-five, he was the youngest person ever to win the Nobel Prize.

On the evening of April 4, 1968, while standing on the balcony of his motel room in Memphis, Tennessee, where he was to lead a protest march in sympathy with striking garbage workers of that city, he was assassinated.

“I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities; it is an ideal for which I am prepared to die.”

Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela was born in Transkei, South Africa in 1918. He earned a law degree from the University of South Africa in 1942 and was prominent in Johannesburg’s youth wing of the African National Congress (ANC) in 1952 he became ANC deputy national president, advocating nonviolent resistance to apartheid.

However, after a group of peaceful demonstrators were massacred in 1960 in Sharpeville, Mandela organized a branch of the ANC to carry out guerrilla warfare against the white government. After being acquitted on charges of treason in 1961, he was arrested in 1964, convicted of sabotage and sentenced to life in prison. During his time in prison he became the leading symbol of South Africa’s oppressed black majority.

Nelson Mandela was released on February 18, 1990. After his release, he plunged himself wholeheartedly into his life’s work for peace and justice. In 1991, Mandela was elected President of the ANC, while his lifelong friend and colleague, Oliver Tambo, became the organization’s National Chairperson.

Mandela won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1993. He was the first democratically elected President of South Africa from May 1994 through June 1999. In December 1999, Mandela was appointed by a group of African nations to mediate the ethnic strife in Burundi; the Arusha accords, a Tutsi-Hutu power-sharing agreement, were finalized in 2001. Now in his 80s, Mandela continues to work for peace.

Rosa Louise McCauley was born in 1913 in Tuskegee, Alabama. She was the granddaughter of former slaves and the daughter of James McCauley, a carpenter, and Leona McCauley, a rural schoolteacher. She grew up in Montgomery, Alabama, where she attended the all black Alabama State College. In 1932 she married Raymond Parks, a barber, with whom she became active in Montgomery’s chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

On December 1, 1955, in Montgomery, Alabama. Parks was arrested for resisting an order to surrender her bus seat to a white passenger. Her protest galvanized a growing movement to desegregate public transportation and marked a historic turning point in the African American battle for civil rights. Parks was placed in prison because she became the leading symbol of South Africa’s oppressed black majority.

In the 1980s she worked in support of the South African anti-apartheid movement; and in Detroit in 1987 she founded the Rosa and Raymond Parks Institute for Self-Development; a career counseling center for black youth.

Parks remained a committed activist until her death in 2005 at age 92.
Betty Williams
Northern Ireland
Peace Activist

Betty Williams was born in Belfast in 1943 and went to Catholic elementary and primary schools. When she won the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1976 she was a 33-year-old office receptionist, wife and mother of a 14-year-old son and a six-year-old daughter.

Williams shared the Nobel Prize with Mairead Corrigan, who co-founded the Northern Ireland Peace Movement (later renamed Community of Peace People). The movement was inspired by an incident in which an Irish Republican Army gunman shot dead fleeing from British soldiers. His car smashed into a family out for a walk. Three children were killed and their mother critically injured.

Betty Williams came upon the scene after she heard the shot, and Corrigan was the aunt of the dead children. This senseless killing of innocent children produced a wave of revulsion against the violence that had been sweeping Northern Ireland.

Williams later emigrated to the United States, where she teaches in a university and has become a stinging lecturer on peace.

Elise Boulding
Peace Studies Pioneer

Elise Boulding is a noted American sociologist and pioneer in the peace studies movement. Born in Norway in 1920, she is a long-time Quaker activist, lecturer and author. After raising five children, she earned a doctorate in sociology at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where she participated in one of the first “teach-ins.” She was the editor of a periodical newsletter that provided news and networking opportunities to international peace teams.

Boulding is emerita Professor of Sociology at Dartmouth College. She was the Secretary-General of the International Peace Research Association, and International President of the Women’s International League of Peace and Freedom (WILPF). She is the author of Cultures of Peace: the Hidden Side of History and other books.

Boulding continues to lecture and consult. She has been called “one of the peace movement’s wisest voices.”

Anwarul Chowdhury
Diplomat Seeks Peace, Serves Least Developed Countries

Anwarul Karim Chowdhury was born in 1943 in Dhaka, Bangladesh. He is the United Nations Under Secretary-General and High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States.

Chowdhury is a specialist in economic and social development, conflict prevention and international security matters. When serving as chair of the UN Security Council, he pioneered discussion in the Council on the role of women in peacebuilding. In 2001, Chowdhury led the negotiations on behalf of the least developed countries at the Third United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries, which adopted the comprehensive Brussels Programme of Action for the present decade.

Chowdhury led the United Nations’ groundbreaking initiative on the culture of peace, chairing the negotiations that produced the landmark document “Declaration and Program of Action on a Culture of Peace,” adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1999. He is a regular contributor to journals on peace, development and human rights issues, and a speaker at academic institutions and other forums.

Mikhail Gorbachev
Former Soviet Premier Helped to End the Cold War

Mikhail Gorbachev was born in 1931 in a village in southern Russia. He rose through the ranks of the Communist party to become the Executive President of the Soviet Union in 1989 and transformation (perestroika) intended to modernize the USSR. His efforts led to his receiving the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1990.

Gorbachev lost his office during the dissolution of the Soviet Union. He continues to work for international peace through the International Foundation for Socio-Economic and Political Studies and Green Cross International.